At Rancho Ponte we specialize in making interesting blends. Most great wines from the old world, such as Bordeaux, or Chateaufneuf du Pape, are blended wines. In the US, we started calling wines by their varietals (i.e. Cabernet Sauvignon) rather than place names, so people would know that European varietals were being used. Nevertheless, there are unspoken rules about what varietals are OK to blend, rules based on what winemakers are allowed to do, which is enforced by European laws.

Those rules do not apply to us.

We are not afraid to blend Merlot, Mourvedre and Muscat Canelli together, for example, and call it "Triple M". This has upset some purists who think winemakers should be given boundaries and only allowed to play within those boundaries. We actually find it fun to rock the boat and upset wine snobs. You will never do anything interesting or different if you want to please everyone.
